Item 8.01 Other Events.

On June 22, 2011, Westamerica Bancorporation's subsidiary bank, Westamerica Bank, received preliminary approval from the Superior Court of California of a tentative mediated class-wide settlement of a lawsuit brought on behalf of a punitive class of its deposit account customers. Westamerica Bank's lawsuit is similar to other lawsuits prevalent in the banking industry related to the assessment of overdraft fees. The lawsuit alleges that Westamerica Bank's manner of processing debit card transactions and other amounts drawn against deposit accounts results in customers paying more overdraft-related charges than they expect to pay. Westamerica Bank disputes its liability and the suitability of the claims for class treatment, but agreed to settle the punitive class action to end the expense and uncertainty created by the litigation. The tentative settlement would require Westamerica Bank to refund a portion of previously assessed overdraft fees to non-business customers. The tentative settlement is contingent on final court approval and is not expected to be effective earlier than the fourth quarter 2011. Westamerica Bank has concluded the settlement is likely and reasonably estimable at this juncture and intends to accrue for the estimated settlement in the second quarter 2011. The anticipated amount of Westamerica's settlement is proportionally similar to the amount of settlements reached for similar litigation experienced by other banks.
