Harmony Gold Mining Company Limited (Harmony) Details of Efficiency Gains at Gold Fields Limited (Gold Fields)

Harmony today announced details of its proposed cost saving measures, which will deliver at least ZAR1billion per annum in improved pre-tax operating profit at Gold Fields South African operations.

Harmony Chief Executive, Bernard Swanepoel said:

Now that we have seen the detail of Gold Fields defence, we are providing detail of our own cost savings proposals we wouldn't have wanted to give Gold Fields a route map to success prior to the launch of their defence.

Last week Gold Fields announced new cost savings initiatives of ZAR 200 to 300 million in South Africa, though given the circumstances one has to treat this with a pinch of salt. However, it does confirm the potential for cost savings that Harmony has identified. The key difference between Harmony and Gold Fields is that while Gold Fields has spent 6 years thinking about efficiency improvements, Harmony has a track record of delivering such improvements time and time again.

Harmony has stated that it can achieve sustainable cost reductions equivalent to 15% per annum in Gold Fields South African cost structure, over and above Gold Fields current efficiency initiatives. Harmony will do this through applying the Harmony Way, which has been so effective at other mines in South Africa, including mines previously owned by Gold Fields.

Specifically for Gold Fields current operations, Harmony sees opportunities to improve the cost structure as follows:

	Planned Savings at Gold Fields			Previously Achieved Savings
	Total Cost 2004 (ZAR m)	Harmony Cost Reduction Target (ZAR m)	Cost Savings as a % of total	Evander	St Helena	Randfontein	Elandsrand
Head Office	140	98	1.45%
Total Operations Cost	6589
Labour cost		330	5%	20%	18%	8%	8%
Synergies:
Stores		264	4%	4%	8%	13%	2%
Electricity & Water		132	2%	2%	5%	3%	2%
Other cost, incl G&A, Services		297	4.5%	7%	(2)%	(3)%	7%
Contractors		66	1%	1%	2%	4%	(1)%
Total Savings from operations	6729	1185	17.95%	33%	32%	35%	17%
Capital Optimisation	880	66
Additional Development		(150)

Total Cost Savings

1101 16.36%

We have based these targets on our previous experience so this is not just wishful thinking, even without full due diligence. The Harmony Way is to reduce overall costs and to increase the proportion of jobs actually at the mining level. Our history shows that we are job preservers in that we are able to extend the life of the mines we acquire.

In the case of Gold Fields, any jobs lost will be at the head office, senior management and service level, said Bernard.

The development of the Gold Fields mines is another key aspect of Harmony's proposal. While Gold Fields has effectively put these mines in harvest mode, Harmony intends to invest in their future. Again, Harmony has done this in the past, turning previously abandoned reserves into growth projects. When these projects are completed, abandoned reserves from previous Harmony acquisitions will produce an aggregate of over 1.5 million higher-grade, lower cost additional ounces per annum.

Gold Fields is condemning its South African assets to a lingering death. Harmony will enhance their life. As Ian Cockerill said at the presentation of Gold Fields formal defence, 'The Harmony Way works in South Africa', commented Bernard.

NOTE TO EDITORS THE HARMONY WAY

A fundamental aspect of Harmony's success has been the application of the unique Harmony Way, a set of management practices and philosophies that essentially flatten the management structure and empower individuals and mine management teams. Four cornerstones underlie this approach:

1. Creating value is about the business of gold mining

We spend money on what really counts – the business of gold mining – most importantly it is an intense focus on the development and optimisation of the value contained in the ore body. It is this scientific approach to ore body optimisation and disciplined approach to cost reduction which has enabled Harmony to successfully make money out of mines that other operators have regarded as throwaway. These principles apply equally to existing long life operations.

2. No frills

Our disciplined cost management approach enables us to reduce cut-offs, thereby dramatically increasing the proportion of the ore body that is available to be mined economically – thus increasing the number of ounces in the ore body, extending the life of mines and saving jobs.

Some people criticise Harmony's no frills approach. However, our people take pride in the fact that we don't spend money on anything that isn't revenue generating (like the thickness of the carpet, the neatness of the gardens, and the smoothness of the roads). At Harmony the garden is underground, i.e. our ore body. That's where our focus and our future lie.

3. We believe in the ability of our people – all our people

We believe that it's our crews operating underground that make the difference. They are the key revenue generators in our business. The rest of us are actually costs – which need to be justified as adding value or delivering a cost efficient service to enable the crew at the rock face to perform the task of extracting the ore body more efficiently.

4. We are lean

The management structures that outsiders see are a real demonstration of this belief. We have a head office/corporate office, which accommodates no more than eight executives. We have no mine related regional offices and extremely flat management structures on our operations. We have forgone the convoluted hierarchical structures that have traditionally dogged the mining industry and are fundamentally based on the premise of supervisors to supervise supervisors. Instead, Harmony has four levels of management on each shaft because that is what we believe is needed to mine optimally. The 26 heads of individual mines and plants report directly to the executive team. By creating an enabling and empowering environment, the individual's productivity improves and consequently the efficiency and the overall performance of the entire business improve.

In summary, the Harmony Way is not rocket science – anything but. It is a back-to-basics approach which brings simple, yet dynamic, business thinking (cost, value, focus and attention to detail) to the mining equation; a philosophy that if you create the right environment, ordinary people will do extraordinary things; all wrapped up in a belief that the right attitude can make ANYTHING possible.
