PHYSICIANS CONTINUE TO VOICE STRONG SUPPORT FOR ALLERGAN VIA OPEN LETTERS TO THE EYE CARE COMMUNITY

Eye Care Professionals Reinforce Preference for Science-Based Companies

Committed to Innovation and R&D in New Poll

IRVINE, Calif. (November 14, 2014) Allergan, Inc. (NYSE: AGN) (Allergan or the Company) today announced results from a recent survey of eye care professionals and the availability of an open letter website in response to requests from physician customers for a platform to voice their concerns regarding the unsolicited proposal from Valeant Pharmaceuticals International, Inc. (Valeant) to acquire Allergan.

In a national survey conducted by M3 Global Research and sponsored by Allergan¹, 604 ophthalmologists (n=300) and optometrists (n=304) shared their perspectives on the industry and what they value most in eye care companies.

Nearly 97 percent of respondents stated that eye care companies should be science-based and innovation-focused to provide value to physicians.

More than three in four (76.8 percent) respondents rate R&D, innovation and new product innovation as very important, extremely important or absolutely essential for eye care companies, and almost 72 percent of those respondents state that they are satisfied or very satisfied with Allergan's R&D innovation and new product development.

More than 75 percent of respondents stated concerns that many large companies pursue short-term profits at the expense of long-term investments.

More than 85 percent noted that Allergan performs well, very well or extremely well as a responsible and positive corporate partner.

Almost 69 percent are very satisfied or satisfied with Allergan's performance and contributions supporting professional medical societies and continuing medical education, and nearly 66 percent responded satisfied or very satisfied when asked about Allergan's contributions relative to patient assistance programs and educational materials.

The survey results align with the consistent feedback we hear from our eye care customers, which is that they value Allergan's commitment to its customers and the eye care industry and are concerned about the impact of Valeant's unsolicited proposal to acquire Allergan, said David E.I. Pyott, Allergan's Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer. While a number of other companies have entered and exited the industry over this time, Allergan has remained committed to providing value to physicians in eye care. We continue to focus on the same priorities of R&D investment, physician education and training, consumer and patient education and corporate philanthropy that have served both our customers and stockholders so well over the past years.

The open letters to the eye care community currently available on Allergan's website state the concerns of eye care professionals regarding Valeant's unsolicited proposal and the anticipated consequences of the attempted acquisition, noting that an acquisition of Allergan by Valeant would greatly decrease funding for R&D and would thus negatively impact our practices and our ability to provide the highest quality care to our patients. The letters have garnered nearly 700 signatures to-date, reinforcing the eye care community's support for Allergan. Within the last week, physicians and health care professionals across the specialty areas Allergan serves have also requested the opportunity to sign letters of support and are now able to do so on the Allergan website. In addition to the open letter signatories, since Valeant first approached Allergan, the Company has received more than 500 supportive letters from physicians, healthcare providers, patient advocacy groups and medical associations from around the world.

All physicians who sign the open letters are doing so voluntarily and are not being compensated in any way by Allergan. To read the Open Letters and learn more about the physician signatures, visit www.allergan.com.

About Allergan
