From Aerospace to Energy, Opportunities for RTI and Alcoa Abound

Alcoa leaders including Alcoa Chairman and CEO Klaus Kleinfeld continue their tour of RTI sites, and from Canada to Texas, one thing is clear: new opportunities for Alcoa and RTI abound.

RTI in Canada

During a recent visit to RTI's Laval, Canada facility, Klaus Kleinfeld, RTI's Dawne Hickton and others learned about RTI's precision machining operations for titanium and aluminum aerospace components and assemblies, which the facility produces for Boeing, Bombardier, Bell Helicopter, Airbus and other customers. These high-tech operations complement Alcoa's existing aerospace portfolio and, similar to comments made during his visit to RTI's machining operations in Minnesota, Kleinfeld noted during a Town Hall that Alcoa will feed into RTI's operations and help optimize your machining, coating and assembly capabilities.

Kleinfeld also said that Alcoa's planned acquisition of RTI was in keeping with Alcoa's transformation into a lightweight, multi-material innovation powerhouse, and will help the company increase its presence in the high-growth aerospace industry.

Dawne Hickton, President of RTI, added that joining an organization as important as Alcoa is an extraordinary opportunity that will provide RTI employees with an enormous pool of knowledge, as well as human and material resources.

RTI in Houston and Austin, Texas

EPS Group President Olivier Jarrault and other Alcoa leaders continued the site tours in Texas by visiting RTI Energy Systems and Extrusions in Houston, as well as RTI Directed Manufacturing in Austin.

In Houston, leaders saw facilities that specialize in titanium stress joints, titanium drill pipe and steel riser systems. RTI Energy Systems perfectly complements Alcoa Oil & Gas, which primarily focuses on aluminum products and does not include the manufacturing or assembly capabilities that RTI has in-house. Together, the businesses will be stronger as they address a larger market. In addition, using RTI for Alcoa's current assembly instead of third parties will increase RTI's utilization.

One of the highlights of the trip was a visit to RTI Directed Manufacturing, which is a highly innovative manufacturer of 3D additive manufactured parts for the aerospace, defense, medical, and energy markets. There, RTI applies the latest additive manufacturing technologies such as Direct Metal Laser Sintering and Plastic Laser Sintering to produce complex products using titanium, nickel-chromium alloys and other specially metals, as well as composite plastics. RTI's flexibility allows it to efficiently serve both commercial production volumes and low-volume prototype engineering applications. RTI's capabilities are an ideal fit with Alcoa's 3D printing activities in the areas of rapid-prototyping and research.
