Attention: All Hewlett-Packard Stockholders

A $25 BILLION MISTAKE IS NOT THE HP WAY

DON'T BET THE COMPANY ON COMPAQ.
IT'S Mired IN MANUFACTURING PCs LOW MARGIN, MONEY-LOSING COMMODITY PRODUCTS.

HP is a strong company. HP is not in crisis. It would be a mistake to become the world's largest commodity computing company, more than doubling HP's exposure to the troubled PC business. THAT WOULD BE A CRISIS.

Why would you want to invest in Compaq, whose own CEO, Michael Capellas, admits that 45% of its revenues are in a rotten business?¹

Why would you want to invest in a company where 64% of its total revenues and 83% of its hardware business is in low-end commodity computing?

Why would you want to invest in a business that suffers from overcapacity and is plagued by reduced demand on a global basis?²

Why would you want to pay 51.6 times CY 2002 estimated earnings for a company that mostly sells PCs and low-end servers, and is losing money in those businesses?³

AND WHY ON EARTH WOULD YOU PAY $25 BILLION FOR IT? YOU WOULDN'T. AND YOU SHOULDN'T.

Neither HP management nor Compaq management has ever successfully integrated a large computing acquisition, let alone a transaction of this size. Why would you trust them when Compaq has lost more than 60% of its shareholder value since its attempt to integrate its $9.4 billion acquisition of Digital Equipment Corporation (DEC) in 1998? Why should you believe that they will succeed where others have failed? Why should you bet your company on that?

The market has made it resoundingly clear that this combination destroys stockholder value:

HP's stock dropped 18.7% when HP announced the proposed Compaq transaction.

HP's stock went up 17.3% when we announced our opposition to the proposed Compaq transaction.

HP's stockholders have lost $7 billion relative to an index of comparable companies since the proposed Compaq transaction was announced. DON'T VOTE FOR THIS MERGER UNLESS YOU WANT TO RISK LOSING A LOT MORE VALUE.

HP stockholders have a clear choice: struggle to survive the turnaround of the PC business and re-run the failed Compaq/DEC strategy or vote AGAINST the merger and send a message to the HP board and management to do something a lot smarter.

WE ARE CONVINCED THERE IS A BETTER PATH

HP was on it when the company spun off Agilent. At that time, the company noted that it was creating two distinct and strategically focused enterprises...able to better focus on growth in their individual markets...[and] well-positioned to build value for their stockholders, customers and employees.⁴

To stay on that path, HP must:

focus on technology and innovation not merger integration;

focus on imaging and printing not commodity computing;

focus on areas of strength in the enterprise not commodity computing;

focus on fixing problems not creating them;

focus on building good businesses not acquiring or expanding bad ones;

focus on treating employees as assets not liabilities;

FOCUS on stockholder value not bigger, but better.

HP SHOULD FOCUS ON CREATING VALUE AND SOLVING ITS OWN PROBLEMS NOT DILUTING VALUE AND TAKING ON COMPAQ S BIGGER PROBLEMS.
