INVESTMENT REVIEW

For the quarter, Cohen & Steers Quality Income Realty Fund had a total return, based on income and change in net asset value, of 9.9%. Based on the market price of the fund's shares, which ended the quarter at $17.86, the fund's total return was 9.0% (The fund's common stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange, and its share price can differ from its net asset value). This compares to the NAREIT Equity REIT Index and Morgan Stanley REIT Preferred Index's total return of 8.2% and 5.7%, respectively. For the nine months ended September 30, 2004, the fund's total return was 14.6% (6.0% based on the market share price), compared to NAREIT Equity REIT Index and Morgan Stanley REIT Preferred Index returns of 14.2% and 4.4%. The fund's asset mix at the end of the quarter was 80% REIT common stocks and 20% preferred and other fixed income investments.

In the third quarter of 2004, REITs enjoyed a strong rebound from the second quarter correction. In fact, the NAREIT Equity REIT Index went on to surpass its late March highs on the basis of investor views about a number of factors, such as the strength of continuing economic growth, improving real estate fundamentals and rising real estate asset values. In April and early May, REIT prices fell 18% as many investors believed that REITs were overvalued and that interest rates were the most important determinant of REIT stock prices. A rising interest rate environment, as conventional wisdom surmised, must be negative for REITs.

Since mid-May, however, REITs have returned 24%. The reasons, we believe, are clear. There is a real economic recovery underway in the United States, as well as a recovery in real estate fundamentals. We view this recovery as broad-based, with solid GDP growth and material job growth. Yet it has taken many by surprise, particularly those who thought that a stronger economy, as evidenced by the March payroll report, and accompanying higher interest rates would be negative for REITs. This recovery has resulted in higher occupancy levels for most property types, higher-than-expected reported earnings for REITs, higher earnings expectations in the future, and higher real estate asset values.

Consistent with our investment thesis, the more cyclical property types -- office, industrial, apartment, hotel and self-storage -- demonstrated some of the largest improvements in fundamentals. For example, office REIT occupancy levels were flat in the first quarter but then improved by 0.5% in the second quarter. Apartment revenues were flat in the first quarter and up 0.3% in the second quarter. Industrial occupancies swung from a decline of 0.4% in the first quarter to an increase of 0.7% in the second quarter. Mixed office/industrial REITs' occupancies declined 0.1% in the first quarter and increased 1.1% in the second quarter.

Commensurate with the fundamental climate, REITs experienced earnings growth in the first quarter that was essentially flat, and essentially in-line with consensus expectations. In the second quarter, however, REIT earnings growth not only accelerated, but pulled meaningfully away from subdued expectations. Whereas the consensus expectation for the second quarter called for 1.6% earnings growth across the REIT sector, actual reported earnings instead increased by 3.8%. The more economically sensitive property types experienced the greatest acceleration in earnings growth and many swung from a year-over-year decline to a year-over-year increase in earnings for the first time in many quarters. Reported cash flow growth per share in the first and second quarter, as segregated by property type were as follows:

2004 REIT CASH FLOW GROWTH

The improvement in fundamentals confounded those who believed that earnings growth would remain stagnant and that REITs were fully valued. Again, this acceleration in reported earnings growth was particularly unexpected for some of the more cyclical property types. Consensus expectations for apartments were for a further deterioration in the second quarter of -6%. Instead the earnings decline shrunk to -2.7%. The consensus expected the industrial REITs to persist in negative territory with a -1% earnings estimate for the second quarter. Instead, earnings increased 0.8%.

Perhaps as important, this jolt in fundamentals has now forced many Wall Street analysts to revise their earnings expectations upward for the REIT sector in future periods. (Our proprietary estimates for REIT earnings growth have been consistent for some time: approximately 4% in 2004 and 10% in 2005, contingent on continued strength in the U.S. economy.) Just since the end of June, consensus REIT earnings growth expectations for 2005 have increased 2.9 percentage points, from 6.4% to 9.3%. And again, the more cyclical the sector, the further behind the curve the analysts have been in their estimates for 2005. For example, expectations for hotel earnings have increased by 7.8 percentage points, office earnings by 5 percentage points, and mall earnings by 3.3 percentage points since June.

We believe that the broad-based improvement in real estate fundamentals is also having a significant impact on the value of real estate assets, contributing to higher REIT stock prices. Evidence of higher occupancies and higher rents for most property types has, in our view, led many REIT investors, analysts and managements to reflect significantly higher estimates of net asset value (NAV) for REIT stocks. In addition to improving property level income, we believe higher replacement costs are also pushing up NAVs. As property markets tighten (especially in densely populated urban areas) and commodity costs rise, the cost of the inputs to a real estate asset -- land, steel, concrete, wood, and labor, among others -- are all rising. As a result of all these factors, it has been our contention for some time that Wall Street NAVs for REIT stocks were too low, making the stocks themselves look expensive on a historical basis. In late September, Merrill Lynch's research team raised their NAV estimates for the entire REIT sector by approximately 9%, corroborating our view that the stocks are not overvalued relative to asset value.

The fund's best performing investments during the quarter were in the shopping center and regional mall sectors, which produced total returns of 13.1% and 12.5% respectively, while the worst performing sector for the fund was the manufactured housing sector, which had a -10.3% total return. Shopping center companies Cedar Shopping Centers and Kramont Realty Trust were the fund's best performing holdings, contributing total returns of 23.6% and 18.3% respectively. Laggards during the quarter included Affordable Residential Communities, with a total return of -10.3% and Maguire Properties that had a total return of -0.2%.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK

For now, it seems that the consensus view of future REIT earnings growth is finally catching up with our own. Further, Wall Street estimates are generally not yet available for 2006, although we believe 2006 may be an even better year for REIT earnings growth than 2005, as higher occupancies and rents begin to work their way through REITs' income statements.

One implication of the REIT market having now more or less correctly anticipated the improving fundamental picture is that the period of multiple expansion for REITs is likely drawing to a close. This implies to us that returns going forward are likely to be more in accordance with historical norms. For example, with REITs yielding 5.1% at quarter-end, and growth anticipated to be approximately 10% in 2005, the potential total return for REITs would be in line with historical norms over the next 12 months if earnings multiples remain unchanged. In short, we believe the REIT bull market is maturing. It is reasonable to expect that returns going forward are going to be lower than they have been over the last 18 months.

COHEN & STEERS QUALITY INCOME REALTY FUND, INC.

This being said, REITs are generally not at peak valuation levels, in our view. On average, our estimates indicate that REITs are trading at about a 6% premium to NAV. This is above the historical average of 2%, but certainly far from the 25% premiums generally associated with past valuation peaks. This NAV premium, if sustained, may actually contribute to REIT earnings growth near term as companies seeking to issue stock will generally have the ability to do so at a premium to NAV and acquire or develop new assets at par. This can in turn contribute meaningfully to earnings accretion, as General Growth has amply demonstrated. For this reason, we believe that equity issuance by REITs will increase from recent levels as the more forward-looking companies look to capitalize -- literally -- on improving fundamentals by acquiring more assets today in a bid to boost earnings in the future. The types of companies we remain invested in are those that we view as offering the greatest potential for rising income and that we believe will benefit most from economic strength. As a result, we believe that our REIT investments, driven both by improving property fundamentals within their existing real estate portfolios and by expanding external acquisition and development opportunities, still offer the potential to generate attractive total returns for shareholders.

Sincerely,

Martin Cohen

OUR LEVERAGE STRATEGY
(UNAUDITED)

While we do not attempt to predict what future interest rates will be, it has been our philosophy to utilize interest rate swap transactions to seek to reduce the interest rate risk inherent in our utilization of leverage. Our leverage strategy involves issuing auction market preferred shares (AMPS) to raise additional capital for the fund, with an objective of increasing the net income available for shareholders. As of September 30, 2004, AMPS represented 31% of the fund's managed net assets. Considering that AMPS have variable dividend rates, we seek to lock in the rate on a majority of this additional capital through interest rate swap agreements (where we effectively convert our variable rate obligation to a fixed rate obligation for the term of the swap agreements). Specifically, we have fixed the rate on 70% of our borrowings at an average interest rate of 4.9%, for an average remaining period of 2.7 years (when we first entered into the swaps, the average term was 5 years). By locking in a large portion of our leveraging costs, we have endeavored to adequately protect the dividend-paying ability of the fund, which is one of the reasons the fund has been able to increase its monthly dividend on several occasions. The use of leverage increases the volatility of the fund's net asset value in both up and down markets. However, we believe that locking in a portion of the fund's leveraging costs for the term of the swap agreements partially protects the fund from any impact that an increase in short-term interest rates may have as a result of the use of leverage.
