NEXUS S: COMING SOON TO VODAFONE STORES

Monday 7 February, 2011 - Vodafone today announced that Nexus STM will soon be available in Vodafone stores around the world. The world's first handset to come powered by the latest version of the Android™ platform known as Gingerbread, Nexus S is packed with Google™'s powerful technology and the latest Samsung hardware features.

Patrick Chomet, Vodafone's Group Director of Terminals, said: "It's great news that our customers will very soon be able to get Google's Nexus S direct through our stores. At Vodafone we work closely with our partners across the industry to offer our customers a leading smartphone range that includes the latest innovations in product and user experience."

DJ Lee, Executive Vice President and Head of Sales & Marketing Team at Samsung's Mobile Communications Business, said: "I am very pleased to introduce this amazing mobile experience to Vodafone's customers. Nexus S integrates Samsung's best-in-class hardware and technology with Android's stunning new features and user experiences. Nexus S enables users to enjoy the latest mobile technology and faster multimedia content with an intuitive user experience."

VODAFONE LAUNCHES WEBBOX AN INNOVATIVE PLUG AND PLAY KEYBOARD, BRINGING INTERNET TO YOUR TELEVISION

Friday 11 February, 2011. Vodafone today announces the launch of the Vodafone Webbox, the first device of its kind, bringing affordable internet access to a customer's existing television set, just by plugging in a keyboard.

The Webbox is a Vodafone innovation developed specifically for customers in emerging markets, where technology and cost barriers often exclude many from enjoying affordable, ready internet access at home or in the workplace. A sleek, black, 14 x 25cm QWERTY keyboard, the Webbox uses standard RCA connectors to plug into the television. With no set-up required, the plug and play keyboard converts any standard domestic television into an internet portal.

Patrick Chomet, Vodafone's Group Director of Terminals said: The Webbox is a simple yet very innovative product. It has the potential to make a powerful difference in the lives of people in emerging markets who have limited access to the internet, but where TV penetration is typically very high. The simplicity of the product is striking – it brings the internet to the TV, be that at home for the family, in schools for education or in small businesses to assist local economic growth.

The Webbox home screen allows the customer to navigate easily between the core services: Opera Mini 5.1 internet access; SMS and email messaging; internet search and media services including FM radio and a photo gallery tool, as well as a music player.

The Webbox Opera Mini browser runs over the 2.5G and EDGE mobile networks, compressing data by around 90% and so serving fast-loading internet pages. The browser homepage comes with bookmarks such as news, sport and social networking sites as well as locally relevant apps such as a job search and application service. In addition, the portal comes with some games, a dictionary and a basic text editor.

In South Africa, Vodacom has today announced that they will start selling the Webbox from next week. Other markets across Vodafone's emerging market footprint will launch in 2011.

VODAFONE REFRESHES OWN-BRAND ULTRA LOW-COST AND FEATURE PHONE RANGES

Handsets further widen participation in mobile data services

Monday 14 February, 2011. Vodafone today announces the design and service refresh of three own-brand handsets, each of which plays a role in extending access to a range of mobile and data services in emerging markets, including money transfer, the mobile internet and a localised content offering. The handsets are due in market from Spring 2011.

- The Vodafone 252 is a refresh of last year's successful ultra-low cost handset. With the same feature set of colour display and standard voice and text functions, the phone now comes with M-PESA preloaded, providing customers in relevant markets with a reliable and easy-to-use mobile payment experience.
- The Vodafone 351 is the most affordable mobile internet phone in Vodafone's own-brand portfolio, and comes with pre-loaded Opera Mini to check mail and surf the internet, an FM radio, a camera, plus 2MB of onboard memory which can be supplemented via a Micro SD card.
- The Vodafone 455 is an entry-price, touchscreen phone with a contemporary design. Also running Opera Mini for internet browsing, the phone has a 2.4" colour screen, a 1.3MP camera, FM radio and a music player.

Patrick Chomet, Vodafone's Group Director of Terminals said: "The Vodafone branded handset programme allows us to extend our services to places of real need. Across the world we are seeing significant changes in how people use their mobile phones to access the internet and other data services - but those changes are not evenly distributed - data penetration in India is at just 6% compared to 37% in Europe. By lowering the price and technology barriers to access, the handsets we're announcing today will let many more customers in emerging markets participate in and benefit from next generation mobile services."

The Opera Mini browser is one of the cornerstones of Vodafone's data strategy for emerging markets and for pre-pay feature phones in Europe. It is able to run over lower capacity mobile networks, compressing data by around 90% to serve fast-loading and thereby affordable internet pages. The browser homepage typically has bookmarked websites such as news, sport and social networking sites as well as locally relevant applications such as job search. The Vodafone Opera Mini service has been rolled out across 20 markets, preloaded onto 32 different handsets and downloaded 9 million times.

Handsets like the Vodafone 252 are helping to build on the success of the award-winning M-PESA mobile payments service which was launched by Vodafone in 2007, and which now transfers over half a billion US$ per month. Simple, fast, affordable and secure the service is currently active in Kenya, Tanzania, South Africa, Afghanistan, Qatar and Fiji and will soon be available in India; 20 million customers across the world are registered to use their mobile phones to transfer money.

VODAFONE AND THE VODAFONE FOUNDATION PARTNER WITH TÉLÉCOMS SANS FRONTIÈRES (TSF) TO HELP BRING EMERGENCY MOBILE COMMUNICATIONS TO DISASTER ZONES

- The Vodafone Foundation agrees 3 year partnership to provide financial support to TSF
- Vodafone to provide technical expertise and innovative mobile solutions, including a trial of Vodafone's instant network

The Vodafone Foundation is deepening its partnership with disaster relief agency Télécoms sans Frontières (TSF) to help bring emergency mobile communications to disaster zones.

Télécoms sans Frontières specialises in bringing wireless communications to affected areas to help humanitarian relief agencies coordinate their efforts and to enable displaced families to make a three minute call to reassure loved ones.

Under the three-year partnership, the Vodafone Foundation will give the agency financial support of 1 million towards its core costs. Vodafone will also be on-hand to provide TSF with innovative mobile equipment for use in emergency situations alongside technical expertise from its employees.

Vodafone has sealed the partnership by designing and trialling a portable mobile network that could help relief workers to reach victims more quickly. In the wake of a humanitarian disaster, the first few days are critical in establishing an effective relief effort. One of the major challenges facing relief agencies operating in these chaotic conditions is the lack of an effective communications network to get help where it is most needed.

To help solve this problem, Vodafone experts, working alongside Huawei at its Mobile Innovation Centre in Madrid, have developed a prototype portable GSM network that can be set up to handle free local calls among relief workers in less than 40 minutes.

Edgar Filing: VODAFONE GROUP PUBLIC LTD CO - Form 6-K

Thanks to its innovative design, the prototype can be packed into three suitcases which can be transported on commercial flights, avoiding the inevitable delays that surround cargo deliveries of bulkier equipment.

Vodafone, in collaboration with Télécoms Sans Frontières and Huawei, recently ran trials of the prototype in a simulated emergency situation in the Pyrenees in Spain. The organisations are now evaluating the technology to see how effectively it could be used in real operations.

Once a disaster has occurred it is important to get a communications network up and running as quickly as possible to accelerate the benefits of aid relief, said Andrew Dunnett, Director of the Vodafone Foundation. We want to use our expertise and our experience to help Télécoms Sans Frontières empower both aid workers and victims in disaster zones across the world. This trial is a good example of how Vodafone and the Vodafone Foundation are determined to bring more than just money to the partnership.

Télécoms Sans Frontières has operations in nearly 60 countries worldwide that serve millions of victims and support more than 550 humanitarian organisations. We have helped out in emergencies such as the Tsunami in Indonesia and the floods in Thailand, Pakistan and Colombia, said Jean-François Cazenave, President of Télécoms Sans Frontières. Vodafone has committed to give us access to their people, access to their partners as well as access to their innovation. Vodafone's support will help us to vastly improve our global humanitarian relief capabilities.

For more information about Télécoms Sans Frontières, go to: www.tsfi.org/

For more information about the Vodafone Foundation, go to:

Notes to Editors:

The ultra-portable GSM/EDGE prototype network comprises three suitcase-sized boxes weighing less than 100Kg that can be transported by plane anywhere in the world in less than 24 hours. Once in the disaster zone, it can be set up to provide instant mobile coverage in less than 40 minutes.

In local mode, the instant network works completely independently from any other network, offering voice and SMS services.

The prototype instant network has been developed for specific emergency situations or remote rural applications in emerging markets and can support 500 users or rescue workers, scalable up to 12,000 users. The network is designed to work with any GSM capable mobile handset.

This solution includes a green base station with ultra low consumption that can be powered by any conventional energy source or alternative green power sources such as solar panels or windmills making it 100% self-sustainable. It also supports intelligent energy management that greatly enhances battery life and limits the requirements for on-site power generation.

LUXOTTICA CHOOSES VODAFONE TO MANAGE ITS GLOBAL MOBILE TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Milan and London, 21 February 2010 Luxottica Group S.p.A. (MTA: LUX; NYSE: LUX), a global leader in premium fashion, luxury and sports eyewear with a strong brand portfolio including Ray-Ban and Oakley and with over 6,300 optical and sun retail stores across the world, today announced that it has selected Vodafone to manage its mobile voice and data services in 24 countries around the world.

Under the two and half year agreement, Vodafone Global Enterprise, the business within Vodafone which manages the communications needs of its largest multinational customers, will supply Luxottica's global wholesale and retail workforce with over 5,000 mobile connections, devices and a range of managed mobile services.

The agreement will make it simpler for Luxottica to manage its global mobile communications more cost effectively.

This is an important agreement with one of the world's biggest telecommunications companies, commented Andrea Guerra, Chief Executive Officer of Luxottica Group. We required simplicity and functionality and Vodafone has focused on this need to deliver worry-free business communications services. We believe that Vodafone is the right partner to help us succeed in an increasingly connected world.

Multinationals like Luxottica are increasingly looking for ways to streamline and simplify the management of their mobile services while driving greater cost efficiencies, said Vittorio Colao, Chief Executive, Vodafone Group. Our fully managed services enable customers to identify cost savings and drive operational efficiency at the same time as providing employees with first class telecommunications. This in turn will enable Luxottica to compete at the highest level and keep a sharper focus on the world of fashion eyewear.
