Introduction

Sprint's $2.97 / Share Offer Provides Full Value to Clearwire's Shareholders Significant premium to the unaffected Clearwire trading price
$0.21 / MHz-POP consistent with precedent transactions
Sophisticated investors (Comcast, Intel, Google, Eagle River, Bright House, Time Warner Cable) with deep knowledge of Clearwire's business agreed to sell at or below the Sprint transaction price
$2.97 / share is above the DCF values of the base SCC business case
Certainty of value (all cash consideration)
$2.97 / share is only 6% below the highest price requested by the Special Committee of $3.15 / share
Unanimous recommendation of the Clearwire Special Committee and Board

MCC Business Case is Not Achievable

Clearwire management produced two business cases. The SCC case and the MCC Case

The SCC case had a high-end DCF value of $0.76 per share (per Centerview) and $1.39 per share (per Evercore) and a peak funding need of $3.9bn in 2017, excluding $4.5bn of debt maturities (an $8.4bn total funding need)

They
the statement

MCC [case] is Achievable
as an investor misperception (page 41 of their May 1, 2013 shareholder presentation)

The Company, however does not expect to be able to obtain a second significant wholesale customer and has been unable to obtain a second significant wholesale customer in spite of its efforts to do so for the last two years

While management raised issues with the low probability of finding a second wholesale customer, it is also important to highlight the aggressive operating assumptions embedded in this case (i.e., it is not appropriate to apply any probability to this case)

The SCC and MCC Cases lack realistic network expenditures

The LTE device assumptions do not appear to be reasonable

Despite the capex issues highlighted above, the SCC Case called for 11.4mm LTE devices by 2020

Without adding any material upfront capex, the MCC Case projects significant additional growth, reaching 40mm LTE devices by 2020, 28.6mm more than the SCC Case (to put this in perspective, TMO USA (excluding MetroPCS) only had 26mm prepaid and postpaid subscribers at YE 2012)

How does Clearwire compete?

MCC only adds $11mm in 2013/2014 capex (vs. SCC); thereafter, both cases assume capex = 10% of revenue (12.5% in 2015 in the SCC case)

Mount Kellett's Pricing for Clearwire is Not Appropriately Adjusted
Source: Company filings.
(a) Implied.
The pricing Mt. Kellett put forth in its letters applied NextWave guard band adjusted prices (see Appendix) to Clearwire's spectrum (without similarly adjusting Clearwire)
The after-tax value is $0.31 per MHz-POP (after Clearwire pays Corporate taxes on the divestiture)
Sprint's $2.97 price per share represents $0.21 per MHz-POP (without adjustment)
NextWave guard band adjustment (see Appendix) assumed 43% of NextWave's spectrum was unusable

(i.e., an even higher percentage versus the Clearwire math shown to the left)

A No

Vote to Sprint's Offer Could Lead to Substantial Dilution for Clearwire's Shareholders

Significant ongoing capital needs ($8.4bn per the SCC case)

Funding will be dilutive (e.g. Crest and Aurelius terms contemplated a $2 / share exchange price)

Morgan Stanley research suggested a $1.00 per share value (published 1/29/2013)

we would be back to the liquidity driven deadlines with downside risk to the Clearwire stock price as cash balances dwindle and debt maturities loom

(Morgan Stanley research 1/29/13)

Sprint reserves all of its rights as the majority shareholder and could contemplate changes to the Clearwire board

Board of Directors

(dated 12/14/12)

As we explained in our November 1 letter, based on the AT&T/NextWave transaction, we believe Clearwire's spectrum to be worth at least $0.38 MHz POP based on the implied price for useable spectrum held by NextWave. The value of just the excess spectrum held by the Company is approximately $6 - $9bn.

$25mm payable to the equity and $25mm in contingent payments bring total cash consideration to $600mm.
