Portfolio Review

The TAIEX lost substantially all of its January gains, posting a return of -11.62% in February (in NT$ terms). The technology sector was February s winner, while non-technology sectors and the finance sector were losers. The Fund performed in line with the market in February. While our overweight position in non-technology sectors (in commodity areas such as plastics, textile, chemical, and paper & pulp) did not yield satisfactory results, our underweight position in the finance sector helped sustain the Fund s performance. Stronger performance of our hedges in the technology sector, such as TFT-LCD and digital camera related stocks, also benefited the Fund.

We will continue to favor non-technology sectors in March. After significant corrections in February, non-technology sectors are looking attractive again, given their continued fundamental support. In particular, we will increase our weightings in auto-related stocks under the China Harvest theme. We believe consolidations in such areas are about to come to an end, and that better performance can be expected.

The investment outlook for March is not very favorable. The expectation of a war is likely to cause investors to be more cautious and may bring more selling pressure to the market. However, we see current market weakness as a great opportunity for investors. A relief rally could be strong following the war. In our view, the fundamental economic situation is not as bad as investors currently perceive it to be.
