PRESS RELEASE

Paris, March 3, 2006. _ Following the many comments published over the last few days, Veolia Environnement would like to provide the following information:

As part of its strategy and international development, Veolia Environnement, in common with all major groups, regularly examines opportunities for growth and reinforcing its position as world leader in environmental solutions, in the interests of the company and its shareholders.

Veolia Environnement has known Enel for many years in the way that two major groups active in related sectors know each other and there have been regular exchanges between them on general or specific matters (water and energy services in Italy, in particular).

In 2005, the two groups discussed a number of matters, including the future of the energy and environmental sectors in Europe, bearing in mind the consensus of experts, analysts and observers as to the likelihood of significant movements toward consolidation in the European energy sector. Recent events have corroborated this point. The two groups then decided to examine the feasibility and conditions of an operation that could be presented when the time had come to the board of directors of Suez.

This project was examined in the framework of Veolia Environnement's international development strategy, guided by a constant concern as to the interests of its shareholders and employees.

On February 20, Enel informed the market of the possibility of an operation concerning, initially, Electrabel and, subsequently, Suez.

In view of this information, Veolia Environnement decided not to proceed further with this study, which could, under these circumstances, lead to a hostile bid contrary to the company's wishes.

Edgar Filing: VEOLIA ENVIRONNEMENT - Form 6-K

Veolia Environnement published a press release to this effect on February 23.
