Mr. David G Gartzke
Chairman of the Board
Adesa, Inc

Re: Agreement to be Acquired by Private Equity Firms

Dear David,

As Adesa, Inc.'s largest current shareholder and an investor since the IPO, we are hereby writing to you and Adesa's entire Board of Directors to express our considerable dissatisfaction regarding the above referenced transaction. We are not only disappointed in the acquisition price, but also in the auction process and certain potential conflicts of interest. Finally, we wonder why the Board seems to have negotiated such an "attractive deal" for private equity investors and current management, at the expense of current shareholders. This transaction raises more questions than it answers regarding motive.

Acquisition Price

On a valuation basis (Enterprise Value/TTM EBIT), the company is being acquired at a 24% discount to a "peer group" of publicly-traded comparables (including Copart [CPRT] and Ritchie Brothers [RBA]), and a 37.5% discount to the private equity purchase multiple of Insurance Auto Auction, Inc (IAAI) which was announced in February 2005. Using another valuation methodology (EV/TTM EBITDA), a similar disparity results, with the company being acquired at a 26% discount to the same group of comparables, and a 13.7% discount to the IAAI deal. More distressing is the fact that IAAI's EBIT margins and returns were well below KAR's, yet IAAI still commanded a higher take-out valuation from private equity investors.

On a Sum-of-the-Parts basis, if you apply the public company comparable multiple average (15.8x TTM EBIT) to KAR's Auction Services TTM EBIT (of $164.7m = $2,602m) and 8x TTM EBIT to the Dealer Services segment EBIT (of $86.1m = $689m), subtract SG&A ($23.4m), add back Cash ($211m) and subtract Long Term Debt ($330m), divided by shares outstanding (90.2m), we arrive at a target price of $35.00.

Auction Process

Adesa, Inc details the auction process in their Preliminary Proxy filed 1/25/07. We wonder why an auction process did not begin with strategic buyers, as opposed to financial buyers. In addition, why was the one "strategic buyer," which had expressed an interest earlier, not included in the bidding process?

Potential Conflicts of Interest

The transaction seems to have several other surprising elements to it, in addition to a sub-par transaction price described above. These others include:

- Adesa, Inc has agreed to indemnify officers and directors against "any personal liability that may result from this transaction "
- Adesa, Inc entered into Change of Control agreements with you and other members of senior management as recently as 12/21/06, to pay lump sums in cash of up to 3x the base pay and annual bonus, if these employees are terminated after this deal. We already know (press release dated 1/16/07) that several members of existing management are likely to be terminated. Are these recent Change of Control agreements a meaningful incentive to enter into this sub-par transaction?
- One of the acquiring private equity investors also happens to be one of the largest public shareholders at 9/06. Common sense suggests that one would only go to the trouble of "taking private" an existing holding, if he believed it was meaningfully undervalued.

Share Performance

Adesa, Inc.'s share price has significantly underperformed the average mid-cap stock (as represented by the S&P 400) since coming public, rising only 7.1% on an annualized basis compared to 14.0% for the S&P 400 Index. At $27.85, Adesa shareholders will receive only a 9.6% premium to the price which your shares traded the day before the announcement of the proposed transaction ($25.40) and a 16% premium (approximately 6% on an annualized basis) to the IPO price of $24 two and half years ago in June 2004.

Despite this underperformance, current management now argues that the business needs significant investment in information technology and operating systems as well as faces additional auction site relocation/consolidation expenses. Why is management only addressing these issues now, several years after acquiring and managing the business as part of Allethe, even before coming public some two and half years ago? Management's answer (which the Board is condoning) seems to be to hand the "keys" of the business over to financial buyers, instead of extracting maximum value by either breaking up the company into its three components or by making the investment decisions that should have been made years ago, then realizing the higher price in the public market that the core comparables command.

We urge the board, as part of its fiduciary duty, to revisit the price as well as the process by which Adesa will be acquired, in order to obtain a more equitable price for all current shareholders. Based on our calculations outlined above, using a sum-of-the-parts methodology,

a price of $35.00 per share would be more in line with industry comparables, excluding any strategic acquisition premium.
